INTRODUCTION :-

Juvenile delinquency is a consequence of any transforming society. The negative socio-pathological phenomenon disrupts the harmonious development of society, threatens the fundamental rights and freedom of the individual, the company produces a feeling of fear and insecurity. Youth crime continues to be a problem because it has failed to completely eliminate its causes and to change the conditions to protect the company and the individual. Youth crime is considered a multidisciplinary issues that has aspects of social and personality as well as sociological, psychological, educational and criminal law.

ABSTRACT:

Criminal behaviour of youth is a constantly current problem. It is not a new problem, a new one emerging and worsening. In the historical context, we meet risen quite early. Likewise, we are punished with the possibilities and attempts to solve it. As we are currently talking about a very topical issue, it is clear that this phenomenon is not quite at the professional and legal level. It is necessary to examine the causes of the criminal children taking these patterns and models into their behaviour and their reactions. From the point of view of the possibilities of solution, then we get completely into other areas and other aspects.

Historical development of views on the crime helps us better understand our present and current views on crime.

Positivist school, which was established in the last quarter century of the 19th century in Italy taught that crime is defined by two series of causes. These are the causes of internal, arising from the natural and heritage of the offender. Then there are external causes of internal arising from the natural and heritage of the offender.

Then there are external causes, comprising physical and especially in the social environment in which the offender lives. Enrico Ferri taught that every crime is the result of the groups of factors: anthropological, physical and social. In a social setting, crime is the result in ~~strongly~~ strongly dependent on these factors. anthropological physical and social. of the positivist school, and Italian physician Cesare Lombroso, examined psychophysical, biological and social factors of juvenile delinquency. His conclusion was based on research results 79 minors less than 12 years, located in the detention centers. At the same time with them he compared the that group of 160 prisoners who have previously committed any crime. Lombroso came to the conclusion that the moral defect in children exhibited much stronger than in adults, but they have the same cause.

CONCLUSIONS:

Right here it's should be no more effective search of young people requiring help create functional models of prevention activities. Among reports to workers with delinquent youth in recent years, it is thought that more objective of conviction as to punish.

Many times it's has been shown that only indiscriminately repressive to tackling crime does not bring the desired result.
